WATCH OUT FOR HAZARDOUS HARRY

Every workplace has a Hazardous Harry. Harry says things like:

- "It won't happen to me."
- "Accidents? What can you do? It's just the luck of the draw."
- "Real men (women) don't need PPE. That stuff is for wimps."
- "Safety rules? I make my own rules."
- "Let me show you a shortcut."
- "That machine guard is just slowing us down. Let's take it off."

Harry (or Harriet) is an accident waiting to happen. Or more likely he's already caused numerous accidents and been responsible for

Team + Work = Safety

Are you a safety team player?

When in the workplace, the most effective results come from people who realize that their goal is best achieved by teamwork. Injury-preventing teamwork on the job consists of a combination of thoughtfulness and responsibility for co-workers' safety as well as your own. For example:

- Lending a hand when asked, or offering help when noticing a need
- Cleaning up a mess or spill that you cause – but even doing it for someone else's mess in order to keep anyone from getting hurt
- Leaving your work area and equipment in safe condition for the next shift
- Turning in defective equipment for repair
- Reminding a co-worker of safe behavior (such as wearing PPE)
- Reporting a potentially hazardous condition to your supervisor

Here's what company managers have said about the importance of teamwork:

"It takes everyone working together cooperatively for everyone to be truly safe."

"Teamwork means taking the time to show someone else the safe way to do a job and asking for help if you are not sure what to do."

"Cooperation of this sort is necessary because we're all in this together – in life itself – and life, like work, is not only safer and more productive but even more fun when we cooperate."
